

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

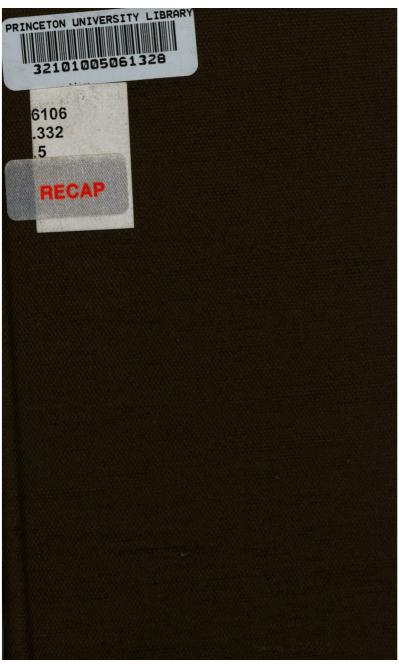

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

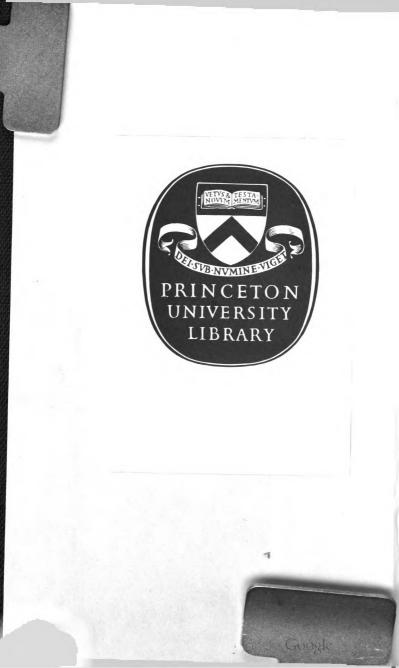

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/

•

LETTER

CONCERNING

TOLERATION.

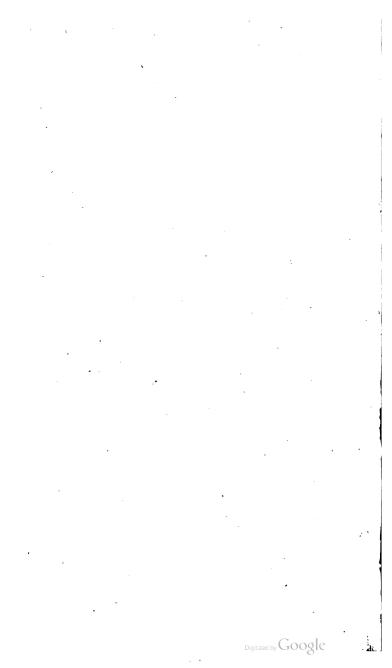

By JOHN LOCKE, Esq.

Huddersfield:

PRINTED FOR THE EDITOR, BY J. BROOK.

1796.

TO THE READER.

HE enfuing Letter concerning TOLERATION, first printed in Latin, in the year 1689, in Holland, was foon translated both into Dutch and French. So general and speedy an approbation may therefore bespeak its fawourable reception in England. I think, indeed, there is no nation under heaven, in which so much has already been faid upon that subject, as ours. But yet certainly there is no people that fland in more need of baving something further both said and done amongs them, in this point, than we do.

Our government has not only been partial in matters of religion; but those also who have suffered under that partiality, and have therefore endeavoured by their writings to windicate their own rights and liberties, have for the most part done it upon narrow principles, suited only to the interests of their own sects.

× · · ·

.;

 \dot{C}_{2}

.

>.

This narrownefs of fpirit, on all fides, has undoubtedby been the occasion of our miferies and confusions. But whatever has been the occasion, it is now high time to seek for a thorough cure. We have need of more generous remedies than what have yet been made use of in our diftemper. It is neither declarations of indulgence, nor acts of comprehension, such as have yet been practised or projected.

Digitized by Google

TO THE READER.

jected among ft us, that can do the work. The first will but palliate, the second increase our evil.

Abfolute liberty, just and true liberty, equal and impartial liberty, is the thing that we stand in need of. Now, though this has indeed been much talked of, I doubt it has not been much understood; I am fure not at all practifed, either by our governors towards the people, in general, or by diffenting parties of the people towards one another.

I cannot therefore but hope, that this difcourfe, which treats of that fubject, however briefly, yet more exactly than any we have yet feen, demonstrating both the equitablenefs and practicablenefs of the thing, will be efteemed highly feafonable, by all men that have fouls large enough to prefer the true interest of the public before that of a party.

It is for the use of such as are already so fpirited, or to inspire that spirit into those that are not, that I have translated it into our language. But the thing itself is so short, that it will not bear a longer preface. I leave it therefore to the consideration of my countrymen, and heartily wish they may make the use of it that it appears to be defigned for.

Note. It appears by the first paragraph of this preface, that it was printed foon after the abdication of James II. during whofe reign, as well as before, that just and true liberty, that equal and impartial liberty, which the great and good Mr. LOCKE pleads for, did not exist; but it should be acknowledged, with thankfulnefs, that matters have been long much altered for the better : May those who have power to do it confider wherein they are fill deficient, and exent themselves to perfect this valuable bleffing.

Digitized by Google

THE EDITOR'S ADDRESS.

Courteous Reader,

HOU art here prefented with a book of great value. The name of the author will prepoffefs thee in its favour, if thou art at all acquainted with him; but the excellency of the fubject, and the mafterly manner in which it is executed, are fill more worthy of thine efteem. Philofophy and Religion are here happily united. The learning of the fchools gives its aid to the fpirit of the gofpel. The bigotry and fuperflition of men are fairly fubdued by folid argument, and the amiable temper of Chrift is exemplified in the defence of that liberty where with he has made us free.

Toleration is a word which is in general facred to religion, and comprehends that liberty which one part of the community has to worfhip God according to their own views, without any moi leftation from another. This appears to be the unalienable birthright of man, as he is only accountable to God in matters of religion.—We readily and cheerfully admít, that the fubjects of a ftate are, by the laws of God, accountable to the civil power for their civil and moral conduct, but for any man, or body of men, to attempt by force to compel others, either with refpect to religious fentiments or modes of worfhip, appears the reverfe of the fpirit of the golpel, as fet forth by Chrift and his apoftles.

The

The following fmall treatife is calculated to answer the most laudable ends, viz. To point out the difference between civil and religious authority; shewing, by scripture and irrefragable argument, that the former belongs to the civil magistrate, the latter only to God. Next, to suppress that bigotry, and all the melancholy fruits thereof, which, to this day, too much prevails among the different fests professing Christianity. The coolness and temper, the truth and perspicuity of idea, the candour and folidity of argument, with which the author has profecuted the subject of religious Toleration, are sufficient to endear the memory of the great LOCKE to all succeeding ages.

Halifax, June 2, 1796.

J. COCKIN.

Digitized by Google

LETTER

CONCERNING

TOLERATION.

Honoured Sir,

DINCE you are pleafed to inquire, what are my thoughts about the mutual toleration of Christians in their different professions of religion, I must needs answer you freely, that I effeem that toleration to be, the chief characteriftical mark of the true church. For whatfoever fome people boaft of the antiquity of places and names, or of the pomp of their outward worship; others, of the reformation of their discipline; all, of the orthodoxy of their faith; (for every one is orthodox to himfelf:) thefe things, and all others of this nature, are much rather marks of men striving for power and empire over one another, Xthan of the church of Chrift. Let any one have never fo true a claim to all these things, yet if he be $\sqrt{}$ deftitute of charity, meeknefs, and good-will in general towards all mankind, even to those that are not Christians, he is certainly yet short of being a true Chriftian himfelf.

The

^c The kings of the Gentiles exercife lordfhip 'over them,' faid our Saviour to his difciples, 'but 'ye fhall not be fo.' Luke xxii. 25. The bufinefs of true religion is quite another thing. It is not inflituted in order to the erecting of an external pomp, nor to the obtaining of ecclefiaftical dominion, nor to the exercifing of compulsive force, but to the regulating of men's lives according to the rules of virtue and piety. Whofoever will lift himfelf under the banner of Chrift, muft, in the first place, and above all things, make war upon his own lufts and vices. It is in vain for any man to usfur the name of Chriftian, without holinefs of life, purity of manners, and benignity and meeknefs of fpirit.

" Thou, when thou art converted, ftrengthen thy * thy brethren,' (Luke xxii. 2.) faid our Lord to Peter. It would indeed be very hard for one that appears carelefs about his own falvation, to perfuade -me that he is extremely concerned for mine: for it is impoffible that those should fincerely and heartily apply themfelves to make other people Christians, who have not really embraced the Christian religion in their own hearts. If the golpel and the apolites may be credited, no man can be a christian without A charity, and without that faith which works, not by force, but by love. Now, I appeal to the confcien-L fees of those that perfecute, torment, destroy, and kill other men upon pretence of religion, whether they do it out of friendship and kindness towards them, or no; and I shall then indeed, and not till then, believe they do fo, when I shall fee those fiery zealots correcting, in the fame manner, their friends and familiar acquaintance, for the manifest fins they commit against the precepts of the gospel; when I shall fee them profecute with fire and fword the members

6

Digitized by Google

members of their own communion that are tainted with enormous vices, and, without amendment, are in danger of eternal perdition: and when I shall fee. them thus express their love and defire of the falvation of their fouls, by the infliction of torments, and exercise of all manner of cruelties. For if it be out γ of a principle of charity, as they pretend, and love to men's fouls, that they deprive them of their Estates, maim them with corporal punifhments, starve and torment them in noifome prifons, and in the end even take away their lives; I fay, if all this be done merely to make men Christians, and procure their falvation, why then do they fuffer ' whoredom, fraud, malice, and fuch like enormities,' Rom. i. (which, according to the apoftle, manifeftly relifh of heathenifh corruption,) to predominate fo much and abound amongst their flocks and people? These, and fuch like things, are certainly more contrary to the glory of God, to the purity of the church, and to the falvation of fouls, than any confcientious diffent from ecclefiaftical decifions, or feparation from public worfhip, whilft accompanied with innocency of life. Why, then, does this burning zeal for God, for the church, and for the falvation of fouls; burning, I fay, literally, with fire and faggot, pais by those immoralities and wickednefles, without any chaftifement, which are acknowledged by all men to be diametrically opposite to the profession of Christianity, and bend all its nerves either to the introducing of ceremonies, or to the establishment of opinions; which, for the most part, are about nice and intricate matters, that exceed the capacity of ordinary underftandings? Which of the parties contending about thefe things is in the right, which of them is guilty of fchilm or herefy, whether those that domineer or those that fuffer, will then at least be manifest, when the

Digitized by Google

the caufe of their feparation comes to be judged of. He certainly that follows Chrift, embraces his doctrine and bears his yoke, though he forfake both father and mother, feparate from the public affembly and ceremonies of his country, or whomfoever, or whatfoever elfe he relinquishes, will not then be judged an heretic.

Now, though the divisions that are amongst fects fhould be allowed to be never fo obstructive of the falvation of fouls; yet, neverthelefs, ' adultery, for-* nication, uncleannefs, lasciviousnefs, idolatry, and • fuch like things, cannot be denied to be the works " of the flesh; (Gal. v.) concerning which the Apoltle has expresly declared that ' they who do them " shall not inherit the kingdom of God.' Whofoever therefore is fincerely folicitous about the kingdom of God, and thinks it his duty to endeavour the enlargement of it amongst men, ought to apply himfelf with no lefs care and industry to the rooting out of these immoralities, than to the extirpation of fects. But if any one do otherwife, and whilft he is cruel and implacable towards those that differ from him in opinion, he be indulgent to fuch iniquities and immoralities as are unbecoming the name of a Christian, let fuch a one talk never fo much of the church, he plainly demonstrates by his actions, that it is another kingdom he aims at, and not the advancement of the kingdom of God.

That any man should think fit to caufe another man, whose falvation he heartily defires, to expire in torments, and that even in an uncoverted state, would, I confess, feem very strange to me; and, I think, to any other also. But nobody, furely, will ever believe that such a carriage can proceed from charity, charity, love, or good-will. If any one maintain, that men ought to be compelled by fire and fword to pro- Xfels certain doctrines, and conform to this or that exterior worship, without any regard had to their morals; if any one endeavour to convert those that are erroneous unto the faith, by forcing them to profefs things that they do not believe, and allowing them to practife things that the gofpel does not permit; it cannot be doubted indeed but fuch a one is defirous to have a numerous affembly joined in the fame profession with himself: but that he principally intends by those means to compose a truly Christian church, is altogether incredible. It is not therefore to be wondered at, if those who do not really contendfor the advancement of the true religion, and of the church of Chrift, make use of arms that do not belong to the Christian warfare. If, like the Captain of our falvation, they fincerely defired the good of fouls, they would tread in the fteps, and follow the perfect example of that Prince of Peace, who fent out his foldiers to the fubduing of nations, and gathering them into his church, not armed with the fword, or other inftruments of force, but prepared with the gofpel of peace, and with the exemplary holine's of their conversation. This was his method. Though, if infidels were to be converted by force, if those that are either blind or obstinate were to be drawn off from their errors by armed foldiers, we know very well that it was much more eafy for him to do it with armies of heavenly legions, than for any fon of the church, how potent foever, with all his dragoons.

8

Digitized by Google

١.

The toleration of those that differ from others in matters of religion, is fo agreeable to the gospel of 7 Jesus Christ, and to the genuine reason of mankind; B 3 that that it feems monstrous for men to be fo blind as not X to perceive the neceffity and advantage of it in fo clear a light. I will not here tax the pride and ambition of fome, the paffion and uncharitable zeal of others. These are faults from which human affairs can perhaps fcarce ever be perfectly freed, but yet fuch as nobody will bear the plain imputation of, without covering them with fome fpecial colour; and fo pretend to commendation, whilft they are carried away by their own irregular passions. But however, that fome may not colour their spirit of perfecution and unchristian cruelty, with a pretence of care of the public weal and observation of the laws; and that others, under pretence of religion, may not feek impunity for their libertinism and licentiousness: in a word, that none may impose either upon himself or others, by pretences of loyalty and obedience to the prince, or of tendernels and fincerity in the worthip of God; I effeem it above all things neceffary to diftinguish exactly the business of civil government from that of religion, and to fettle the just bounds. that lie between the one and the other. If this be not done, there can be no end put to the controverfies that will be always arifing between those that have, or at least pretend to have, on the one fide, a concernment for the interefts of men's fouls, and on the other fide, a care of the commonwealth.

The commonwealth feems to me to be a fociety of men conflituted only for the procuring, preferving, and advancing of their own civil interests

(Civil interests I call life, liberty, health, and indolency of body; and the possibilition of outward things, such as money, lands, houses, furniture, and the like.)

Digitized by Google

It is the duty of the civil magistrate, by the impartial execution of equal laws, to fecure unto all the people in general, and to every one of his fubjects in particular, the just possession of these things belonging to this life. If any one prefume to violate the laws of public justice and equity, established for the prefervation of these things, his prefumption is to be checked by the fear of punishment, confisting in the deprivation or diminution of those civil interests, or goods, which otherwife he might and ought to enjoy. But feeing no man does willingly fuffer himfelf to be punished by the deprivation of any part of his goods, and much lefs of his liberty or life, therefore is the magistrate armed with the force and strength of all his fubjects, in order to the punishment of those that violate any other man's rights.

Now, that the whole jurifdiction of the magistrate reaches only to these civil concernments; and that all civil power, right, and dominion, is bounded and confined to the only care of promoting these things; and that it neither can nor ought in any manner to be extended to the falvation of fouls; these following confiderations seem unto me abundantly to demonfirate.

Firft, Becaufe the care of fouls is not committed to the civil magiftrate any more than to other men. It is not committed unto him, I fay, by God; becaufe it appears not that God has ever given any fuch authority to one man over another, as to compel any one to his religion. Nor can any fuch power be veffed in the magiftrate by the ' confent of the people;' becaufe no man can fo far abandon the care of his own falvation, as blindly to leave it to the choice of any other, whether prince or fubject, to prefcribe to him what what faith or worship he shall embrace: for no man can, if he would, conform his faith to the dictates of another. All the life and power of true religion \mathcal{X} confifts in the inward and full perfusion of the mind; $\stackrel{\searrow}{\rightarrow}$ and faith is not faith without believing. Whatever profession we make, to whatever outward worship we conform, if we are not fully fatisfied in our mind that the one is true, and the other well-pleafing unto God; (fuch profession and such practice, far from being any furtherance, are indeed great obftacles to our falvation. For in this manner, inflead of explating other fins by the exercise of religion; I fay, in offering unto God almighty fuch a worfhip as we effeem to be difpleafing unto him, we add unto the number of our other fins those also of hypocrify, and contempt of his divine majefty.

In the fecond place, The care of fouls cannot belong to the civil magistrate, because his power confists only in outward force: but true and faving religion confists in the inward perfuasion of the mind; without which nothing can be acceptable to God. And fuch is the nature of the understanding, that it cannot be compelled to the belief of any thing by outward force. Confiscation of estate, imprisonment, torments; nothing of that nature can have any such efficacy, as to make men change the inward judgment that they have framed of things.

It may indeed be alleged, that the magistrate may make use of arguments, and thereby draw the heterodox into the way of truth, and procure their falvation. I grant it: but this is common to him with other men. In teaching, instructing, and redressing the erroneous by reason, he may certainly do what becomes any good man to do. Magistracy does not oblige him to

Digitized by Google

to put off either humanity or Christianity. But it is one thing to perfuade, another to command: one thing to prefs with arguments, another with penalties. This the civil power alone has a right to do: to the other, good-will is authority enough. Every man has commiffion to admonifh, exhort, and convince another of error; and by reafoning to draw him into truth: but to give laws, receive obedience, and compel with the fword, belongs to none but the magistrate. And upon this ground I affirm, that the magistrate's power extends not to the establishing of any articles of faith, or forms of worship, by the force of his laws. For laws > are of no force at all without penalties, and penalties in this cafe are absolutely impertinent, because they are not proper to convince the mind Neither the profeffion of any articles of faith, nor the conformity to any outward form of worship (as has already been faid) can be available to the falvation of fouls, unlefs the truth of the one, and the acceptableness of the other unto God, be thoroughly believed by those that fo profess and practife. But penalties are no ways capable to produce fuch belief. It is only light and evidence that can work a change in men's opinions. And that light can in no manner proceed from corporal fufferings, or any other outward penalties.

In the third place, The care of the falvation of men's fouls cannot belong to the magistrate; because, though the rigour of laws, and the force of penalties were capable to convince and change men's minds, yet would not that help at all to the falvation of fouls. For there being but one truth, one way to heaven 3 x what hopes are there that more men would be led into? it, if they had no other rule to follow but the religion of the court and were put under a necessity to quit the light of their own reason, to oppose the dictates of

of their own confciences, and blindly to refign up themfelves to the will of their governors, and to the religion, which either ignorance, ambition, or fuperfition had chanced to eftablifh in the countries where they were born? In the variety and contradiction of opinions in religion, wherein the princes of the world are as much divided as in their fecular interefts, the narrow way would be much ftraitened. One country alone would be in the right, and all the reft of the world would be put under an obligation of following their princes in the ways that lead to deftruction. And that which heightens the abfurdity, and very ill fuits the notion of a Deity, men would owe their eternal happines or misery to the places of their nativity.

These confiderations, to omit many others that might have been urged to the fame purpose, feem unto me fufficient to conclude, that all the power of civil government relates only to men's civil interests; is confined to the care of the things of this world, and hath nothing to do with the world to come.

Let us now confider what a CHURCH is. A church then I take to be 'A voluntary fociety of men, ' joining themfelves together of their own accord, in ' order to the public worfhipping of God, in fuch a ' manner as they judge acceptable to him, and effec-' tual to the falvation of their fouls.'

I fay, it is a free and voluntary fociety. Nobody is born a member of any church, otherwife the religion of parents would defeend unto children, by the fame right of inheritance as their temporal effates, and every one would hold his faith by the fame tenure he does his lands; than which nothing can be more abfurd.

. 100gle

furd. Thus, therefore, that matter flands. No man by nature is bound unto any particular church or fect, but every one joins himfelf voluntarily to that fociety, in which, he believes, he has found that profession and worship which is truly acceptable unto God. The hopes of falvation, as it was the only caufe of his \star entrance into that communion, fo it can be the only reason of his stay there : for if afterwards he discover any thing either erroneous in the doctrine, or incongruous in the worfhip of that fociety to which he has joined himfelf; why fhould it not be as free for him to go out as it was to enter? No member of a religious fociety can be tied with any other bonds but what proceed from the certain expectation of eternal life. (A church then is a fociety of members voluntarily uniting to this end.

It follows now that we confider what is the power of this church, and unto what laws it is fubject.

Forafmuch as no fociety, how free fo ever, or upon whatfoever flight occasion inftituted, (whether of philosophers for learning, of merchants for commerce, or of men of leifure for mutual conversation and difcourfe,) no church or company, I fay, can in the least fubfift and hold together, but will prefently diffolve and break to pieces, unlefs it be regulated by fome laws, and the members all confent to obferve fome order : place and time of meeting must be agreed on ; rules for admitting and excluding members must be established ; diffinction of officers, putting things into a regular courfe, and fuch like, cannot be omitted. But fince the joining together of feveral members into this church-fociety, as has already been demonstrated, is abfolutely free and fpontaneous, it neceffarily fol- y_2 lows, that the right of making laws can belong to none none but the fociety itfelf, or at leaft (which is the fame thing) to those whom the fociety by common confent has authorifed thereunto.

Some perhaps may object, that no fuch fociety can be faid to be a true church, unlefs it have in it a bifhop, or prefbyter, with ruling authority derived from the very apoftles, and continued down unto the prefent times by an uninterrupted fucceffion.

To these I answer, in the first place, Let them shew me the edict by which Christ has imposed that law upon his church. And let not any man think meimpertinent, if in a thing of this confequence, I require that the terms of that edict be very express and positive; for the promise he has made us, that 'where-'foever two or three are gathered together in his name, 'he will be in the midit of them,' (Matt. xviii. 20.) feems to imply the contrary. Whether such an affembly want any thing necessary to a true church, pray do you consider. Certain I am, that nothing can be there wanting unto the falvation of fouls; which is sufficient to our purpose.

Next, Pray observe how great have always been the divisions amongst even those who lay fo much stress upon the divine institution, and continued fuccession of a certain order of rulers in the church. Now their very differition unavoidably puts us upon a necessity, of deliberating, and confequently allows a liberty of choosing that which upon confideration we prefer.

And in the last place, I confent that these menhave a ruler of their church, established by such a long feries of succession as they judge necessary, provided I may have liberty at the same time to join myself. to

Digitized by Google

17

to that fociety, in which I am perfuaded those things are to be found which are neceffary to the falvation of my foul. In this manner ecclefiastical liberty will be preferved on all fides, and no man will have a legislator imposed upon him but whom himself has chosen.

But fince men are fo folicitous about the true church, I would only ask them here by the way, if it he not more agreeable to the church of Christ, to make the conditions of her communion confift in fuch things, and fuch things only, as the holy Spirit has, in the holy scriptures, declared in express words to be necesfary to falvation? I afk, I fay, whether this be not more agreeable to the church of Chrift, than for mento impose their own inventions and interpretations \star upon others, as if they were of divine authority, and to eftablish, by ecclesiaftical laws, as absolutely neccessary to the profession of Christianity, such things as the holy fcriptures do either not mention, or at least not expressly command ? Whofoever requires those th ngs in order to ecclefiaftical communion, which Chrift does not require in order to life eternal, he may perhaps indeed conflitute a fociety accomodated to his own opinion, and his own advantage; but how that can be called the church of Christ, which is established upon laws that are not his, and which excludes fuch perfons from its communion as he will one day receive into the kingdom of heaven, I understand not. But this being not a proper place to enquire into the marks of the true church, I will only mind those that contend so earnestly for the decrees of their own fociety, and that cry out continually, ' the church, ' the church,' with as much noife, and perhaps upon the fame principle, as the Ephefian filversmiths did for their Diana: this, I fay, I defire to mind them of v of, that the golpel frequently declares that the true disciples of Chrift must fuffer perfecution : but that the church of Chrift should perfecute others, and force others by fire and sword to embrace her faith and doctrine, I could never yet find in any of the books of the New Testament.

The end of a religious fociety (as has already been faid) is the public worfhip of God, and by means thereof the acquifition of eternal life. All difcipline ought therefore to tend to that end, and all ecclefiaftical laws to be thereunto confined. Nothing ought nor can be transacted in this fociety, relating to the posseful of civil and worldly goods. No force is here to be made use of upon any occasion whatloever; for force belongs wholly to the civil magistrate, and and the posseful of all outward goods is subject to his jurisdiction.

But it may be asked, by what means then shall ecclesiaftical laws be established, if they must be thus destitute of all compulsive power? I answer, they must be established by means suitable to the nature of fuch things, whereof the external profession and obfervation, if not proceeding from a thorough conviction and approbation of the mind, is altogether ufelefs and unprofitable. The arms by which the members y of this fociety are to be kept within their duty, are exhortations, admonitions, and advices. If by thefe means the offenders will not be reclaimed, and the erroneous convinced, there remains nothing farther to be done, but that fuch flubborn and obstinate perfons, who give no ground to hope for their reformation, should be call out and separated from the society. This is the last and utmost force of ecclesiastical authority. No other punishment can thereby be inflicted ed, than that the relation ceafing between the body and the member which is cut off, the perfon so con- χ demned ceases to be a part of that church.

Digitized by Google

Thefe things being thus determined, let us enquire, in the next place, how far the duty of toleration extends, and what is required from every one by it.

(And first, I hold, That no church is bound, by) the duty of toleration, to retain any fuch perfon in her bosom, as, after admonition, continues obstinately to offend against the laws of the society : for these being the condition of communion, and the bond of the fociety; if the breach of them were permitted without any animadversion, the fociety would immediately be thereby diffolved.) But neverthelefs, in all fuch cafes, care is to be taken that the fentence of excommunication, and the execution thereof, carry with it no rough usage of word or action, whereby 3 the ejected perion may anywife be damnified in body or effate. For all force (as has often been faid) belongs only to the magiftrate; nor ought any private perfons, at any time, to use force, unless it be in felfdefence against unjust violence. Excommunication neither does, nor can deprive the excommunicated perfon of any of those civil goods that he formerly poffeffed. All those things belong to the civil government, and are under the magistrate's protection. The whole force of excommunication confifts only in this, that the refolution of the fociety in that repect being declared, the union that was between the body and fome member comes thereby to be diffolved; and that relation ceafing, the participation of fome certain things, which the fociety communicated to its members, and unto which no man has any civil right, C 2 comes comes also to cease: for there is no civil injury done unto the excommunicated, by the church minifter's refusing him that bread and wine, in the celebration of the Lord's supper, which was not bought with his, but other men's money.

Secondly, No private perfon has any right, in any manner, to prejudice another perfon in his civil enjoyments, because he is of another church or religion.) All the rights and franchifes that belong to him as a man, or as a denizen, are inviolably to be preferved to him. These are not the business of religion. No violence nor injury is to be offered him, whether he be christian or pagan. Nay, we must not content ourfelves with the narrow measures of bare juffice; charity, bounty, and liberality muft be added to it. This the gospel enjoins; this reason directs; and this that natural fellowship we are born into requires of us. If any man err from the right way, it is his own misfortune, no injury to thee; nor therefore art thou to punish him in the things of this life, because thou supposes he will be miserable in that which is to come.

What I fay concerning the mutual toleration of private perfons differing from one another in religion, I understand also of particular churches, which stand as it were in the fame relation to each other as private perfons among themselves; nor has any one of them any manner of jurifdiction over any other, no not even when the civil magistrate (as it fometimes happens) comes to be of this or the other communion. For the civil government can give no new right to the church, nor the church to the civil government: fo that whether the magistrate join himfelf to any church, or feparate from it, the church remains remains always as it was before, a free and voluntary $\begin{pmatrix} x \\ y \end{pmatrix}$ fociety. It neither acquires the power of the fword $\begin{pmatrix} x \\ y \end{pmatrix}$ by the magiftrate's coming to it, nor does it lofe the right of inftruction and excommunication by his going from it. This is the fundamental and immutable right of a fpontaneous fociety, that it has power to remove any of its members who transgrefs the rules of its inftitution; but it cannot, by the acceffion of any new members, acquire any right of jurifdiction over those that are not joined with it. And therefore peace, equity, and friendship, are always mutually to be observed by particular churches, in the fame manner as by private perfons, without any pretence of fuperiority or jurifdiction over one another.

20

Digitized by Google

That the thing may be made yet clearer by an example, let us suppose two churches, the one of Arminians, the other of Calvinist, reliding in the city of Constantinople: will any one fay, that either of these churches has a right to deprive the members of the other of their estates and liberty, (as we see practifed elfewhere) becaufe of their differing from it in fome doctrines or ceremonies; whilft the Turks, in the mean while, filently ftand by, and laugh to fee with what inhuman cruelty Christians thus rage against Chriftians? But if one of these churches hath this power of treating the other ill, I ask which of them it is to whom that power belongs, and by what right? It will be answered undoubtedly, that it is the orthodox church which has the right of authority over the erroneous and heretical. This is, in great and fpecious words, to fay just nothing at all: for every church $\searrow k \in \mathbb{R}^{n}$ is orthodox to itfelf; to others, erroneous or heretical. Whatfoever any church believes, it believes to be true, and the contrary thereto it pronounces to be error: fo that the controverfy between these churches C 2 about about the truth of their doctrines, and the purity of their worfhip; is on both fides equal; nor is there any judge, either at Conftantinople, or elfewhere upon the earth, by whole fentence it can be determined. The decifion of that queftion belongs only to the fupreme Judge of all men, to whom alfo alone belongs the punifhment of the erroneous. In the mean while, let those men confider how heineoufly they fin, who, adding injustice, if not to their error, yet certainly to their pride, do rafhly and arrogantly take upon them to mifuse the fervants of another master, who are not at all accountable to them.

Nay farther, if it could be manifest which of these two diffenting churches were in the right way, there would not accrue thereby to the orthodox any right of deftroying the other; for churches have neither any jurifdiction in worldly matters, nor are fire and fword any proper inftruments wherewith to convince men's minds of error, and inform them of the truth. Let us suppose, nevertheless, that the civil magistrate inclined to favour one of them, and to put his fword into their hands, that (by his confent) they might chaftife the diffenters as they pleafed ; will any man fay, that any right can be derived unto a Christian church over its brethren, from a Turkish emperor? An infidel, who has himfelf no authority to punish Christians for the articles of their faith, cannot confer fuch an authority upon any fociety of Christians, nor give unto them a right which he has not himfelf. This would be the cafe at Conftantinople; and the reafon of the thing is the fame in any Christian kingdom. The * civil power is the fame in every place; nor can that power, in the hands of a Christian prince, confer any greater authority upon the church, than in the hands of a heathen; which is to fay, just none at all.

Neverthelefs,

TOODE

Neverthelefs, it is worthy to be observed, and lamented, that the most violent of these defenders of the truth, the oppofers of errors, the exclaimers against fchifm, do hardly ever let loofe this their zeal for God with which they are fo warmed and inflamed, unlefs where they have the civil magiftrate on their fide : but fo foon as ever court-favour has given them the better end of the staff, and they begin to feel themfelves the stronger, then prefently peace and charity are to be laid afide; otherwife, they are religioufly to be observed. Where they have not power to carry on perfecution, and to become mafters, there they defire to live upon fair terms, and preach up toleration. When they are not ftrengthened with the civil power, then they can bear most patiently and unmovedly the contagion of idolatry, fuperfition, and herefy in their neighbourhood; of which, on other occasions, the interest of religion makes them to be extremely apprehensive. They do not forwardly attack those errors which are in fashion at court, or are countenanced by the government. Here they can be content to fpare their arguments; which yet (with their leave) is the only right method of propagating truth; which has no fuch way of prevailing, as when frong arguments and good reason are joined with the foftness of civility and good usage.

(Nobody, therefore, in fine, neither fingle perfons) nor churches, nay, nor even commonwealths, have any just title to invade the civil rights and worldly goods of each other upon pretence of religion) Those that are of another opinion, would do well to confider with themfelves how pernicious a feed of difcord and war, how powerful a provocation to endlefs hatreds, rapines, and flaughters, they thereby furnifh unto mankind. No peace and fecurity, no not fo much much as common friendship, can ever be established or preferved amongst men, so long as this opinion prevails, 'That dominion is founded in grace, and 'that religion is to be propagated by force of arms.'

23

È.

Kr '

In the third place, let us fee what the duty of toleration requires from those who are diffinguished from the reft of mankind (from the Laity, as they pleafe to call us) by fome ecclefiaftical character and office ; whether they be bishops, priest, presbyters, ministers, or however dignified or distinguished. It is not my business to enquire here into the original of the power or dignity of the clergy. This only I fav, that whence foever their authority be fprung, fince it is ecclefiaftical, it ought to be confined within the bounds of the church, nor can it in any manner be extended to civil affairs; because the church itself is \sqrt{a} a thing absolutely separate and diffind from the commonwealth: the boundaries on both fides are fixed and immoveable. He jumbles heaven and earth together, the things most remote and opposite, who mixes these focieties, which are in their original, end, bufinefs, and in every thing, perfectly diffinct, and infinitely different from each other. No man, therefore, with whatfoever ecclefiaftical office he be dignified, can deprive another man that is not of his church and faith, either of liberty, or of any part of this worldly goods, upon the account of that diffeence which is between them in religion : for whatever is not lawful to the whole church, cannot, by any ecclefiaftical right, become lawful to any of its members.

But this is not all: it is not enough that ecclefiaftical men abstain from violence and rapine, and all manner of perfecution. He that pretends to be a fucceffor

1 24

Digitized by Google.

fucceffor of the apoftles, and takes upon him the of- \times fice of teaching, is obliged also to admonish his hearers of the duties of peace and good-will towards all men, as well towards the erroneous as the orthodox; towards those that differ from them in faith and worthip, as well as towards those that agree with them therein. And he ought industriously to exhort all men, whether private perfons or magistrates, (if any) fuch there be in his church) to charity, meeknefs, and toleration; and dilligently endeavour to allay and temper all that heat and unreasonable averseness of mind, which either any man's fiery zeal for his own fect, or the craft of others, has kindled against diffenters. I will not undertake to reprefent how happy and how great would be the fruit, both in church and state, if the pulpits every where founded with this doctrine of peace and toleration; left I should feem to reflect too feverely upon those men whose dignity I defire not to detract from, nor would have it diminished either by others or themselves : but this I fay, that thus it ought to be. And if any one that profeffes himfelf to be a minister of the word of God, a preacher of the gofpel of peace, teach otherwife, he either understands not, or neglects the business of his calling, and shall one day give an account thereof unto the Prince of Peace. If Christians are to be admonished that they abstain from all manner of revenge, even after repeated provocations and multiplied injuries, how much more ought they who fuffer nothing, who have had no harm done them, forbear violence, and abstain from all manner of ill usage towards those from whom they have received none? This caution and temper they ought certainly to use towards those who mind only their own business, and are folicitous for nothing but that (whatever men think of them) they may worthip God in that manner ner which they are perfuaded is acceptable to him, and in which they have the ftrongest hopes of eternal falvation. In private domestic affairs, in the management of effates, in the confervation of bodily health, every man may confider what fuits his own conveniency, and follow what courfe he likes beft. No man complains of the ill management of his neighbour's affairs. No man is angry with another for an error committed in fowing his land, or in marrying his danghter. Nobody corrects a fpend-thrift for confuming his fubftance in taverns. Let any man pull down, 1 or build, or make whatfoever expences he pleafes, nobody murmurs, nobody controls him; he has his liberty : (but if any man do not frequent the church, if he do not there conform his behaviour exactly to the accustomed ceremonies, or if he bring not his children to be initiated in the facred mysteries of this or the other congregation; this immediately caufes an uproar, and the neighbourhood is filled with noife , and clamour, every one is ready to be the avenger of fo great a crime; and the zealots hardly have patience to refrain from violence and rapine to long till the caufe be heard, and the poor man be, according to X form, condemned to the loss of liberty, goods, or life. Oh that our ecclefiaftical orators, of every fect, would apply themfelves with all the ftrength of argument that they are able, to the confounding of men's errors, but let them fpare their perfons. Let them not fupply their want of reafons with the inftruments of force, which belong to another jurifdiction, and do ill become a churchman's hands. Let them not call in the magistrate's authority to the aid of their eloquence or learning, left, perhaps, while they pretend only love for the truth, this their intemperate zeal, breathing nothing but fire and fword, betray their ambition, and shew that what they defire is temporal dominion :

Digitized by Google

dominion: for it will be very difficult to perfuade men of fenfe, that he who with dry eyes, and fatiffaction of mind, can deliver his brother unto the executioner to be burnt alive, does fincerely and heartily concern himfelf to fave that brother from the flames of hell in the world to come.

In the last place, let us now confider what is the magistrate's duty in the business of toleration; which certainly is very confiderable.

We have already proved, that the care of fouls does not belong to the magistrate. "Not a magisterial care, I mean, (if I may fo call it) which confifts in prefcribing by laws, and compelling by punifhments : but a charitable care, which confilts in teaching, admonifhing, and perfuading, cannot be denied unto any man. The care therefore of every man's foul belongs unto himfelf, and is to be left unto himfelf. XBut what if he neglect the care of his foul? I answer. what if he neglect the care of his health, or of his eftate; which things are nearlier related to the government of the magistrate than the other? Will the magistrate provide, by an express law, that such a one fhall not become poor, or fick? Laws provide, as much as is poffible, that the goods and health of fubjects be not injured by the fraud or violence of others : they do not guard them from the negligence or ill hufbandry of the poffeffors themfelves. No man can be forced to be rich or healthful whether he will or no. Nay, God himfelf will not fave men against their χ wills. Let us fuppofe, however, that fome prince was defirous to force his fubjects to accumulate riches, or to preferve the health and ftrength of their bodies; shall it be provided by law, that they must confult none but Roman phylicians? and shall every one one be bound to live according to their prefcriptions? What! shall no potion, no broth be taken, but what is prepared either in the Vatican, fuppofe, or in a Geneva (hop? Or, to make these subjects rich, shall they all be obliged by law to become merchants, or muficians? Or, shall every one turn victualler, or smith, because there are some that maintain their families plentifully, and grow rich in those professions? But it may be faid, there are a thousand ways to wealth, but only one way to heaven. It is well faid indeed, especially by those that plead for compelling men into this or the other way; for if there were feveral ways that lead thither, there would not be fo much as a pretence left for compulsion. But now, if I be marching on with my utmost vigour, in that way which, according to the facred geography, leads ftraight to Jerufalem; why am I beaten and ill used by others, becaufe, perhaps, I wear no bufkins; becaufe my hair is not of the right cut; because, perhaps, I have not been dipt in the right fashion; because I eat flefh upon the road, or fome other food which agrees with my flomach; becaufe I avoid certain bye-ways, which feem unto me to lead into briars or precipices; because, amongst the several paths that are in the fame road, I chufe that to walk in which feems to be the straightest and cleanest; because I avoid to keep company with fome travellers that are lefs grave, and others that are more four than they ought to be; or, in fine, becaufe I follow a guide that either is, or is not clothed in white, and crowned with a mitre? Certainly, if we confider right, we shall find that, for the most part, they are such frivolous things as these, that (without any prejudice to religion, or the falvation of fouls, if not accompanied with fuperftition or hypocrify) might either be observed or omitted; I fay they are such like Things as these, which breed implacable implacable enmities amongst christian brethren, who are all agreed in the fubstantial and truly fundamental part of religion.

29

But let us grant unto these zealots, who condemn all things that are not of their mode, that from these circumstances arise different ends. What shall we conclude from thence? There is only one of thefe > which is the true way to eternal happinefs. But in this great variety of ways that men follow, it is ftill \star doubted which is this right one. Now neither the care of the commonwealth, nor the right of enacting laws, does difcover this way that leads to heaven more certainly to the magistrate, than every private man's fearch and ftudy difcovers it unto himfelf. Ι have a weak body, funk under a languishing difeafe, for which (I suppose) there is one only remedy, but that unknown: does it therefore belong unto the magistrate to prescribe to me a remedy, because there is but one, and because it is unknown? Because there is but one way for me to escape death, will it therefore be fafe for me to do whatfoever the magistrate ordains? Those things that every man ought fincerely to enquire into himfelf, and by meditation, fludy. fearch, and his own endeavours, attain the knowledge of, cannot be looked upon as the peculiar poffeffion of any one fort of men. Princes indeed are born fuperior, unto other men in power, but in nature equal. Neither the right, nor the art of ruling, does neceffarily carry along with it the certain knowledge '2' of other things; and leaft of all of the true religion. For if it were fo, how could it come to pass that the lords of the earth should differ to vaftly as they do in religious matters? But let us grant that it is probable the way to eternal life may be better known by a prince than by his fubjects; or at least, that in this this incertitude of things, the fafeft and most commodious way for private perfons is to follow his dictates. You will fay, what then? If he should bid you follow merchandife for your livelihood, would you decline that courfe for fear it fhould not fucceed? I answer, I would turn merchant upon the prince's command, becaufe, in cafe I should have ill success in trade, he is abundantly able to make up my lofs fome other way. If it be true, as he pretends, that he defires I fhould thrive and grow rich, he can fet me up again when unfuecessful voyages have broke me. But this is not the cafe in the things that regard the life to come. If there I take a wrong courfe, if in that refpect I am once undone; it is not in the magistrate's power to repair my loss, to ease my fuffering, or to reftore me in any measure, much lefs entirely, to a good effate. What fecurity can be given for the kingdom of heaven ?

Perhaps fome will fay, that they do not fuppole this infallible judgement, that all men are bound to follow in the affairs of religion, to be in the civil magistrate, but in the church. What the church has determined, that the civil magistrate orders to be observed; and he provides by his authority, that nobody shall either act or believe, in the business of religion, otherwife than the church teaches: fo that the judgment of those things is in the church. The magistrate himself yields obedience thereunto, and requires the like obedience from others. I anfwer, who fees not how frequently the name of the church, which was fo venerable in the time of the apoftles, has been made use of to throw dust in people's eyes, in following ages? But, however, in the prefent cafe it helps us not. The one only narrow V way which leads to heaven is not better known to the

Digitized by Google

39

÷

the magistrate than to private perfons; and therefore \times I cannot fafely take him for my guide, who may probably be as ignorant of the way as myfelf, and who certainly is lefs concerned for my falvation than I myfelf am. Amongst fo many kings of the Jews, how many of them were there whom any Ifraelite, thus blindly following, had not fallen into idolatry, and thereby into deftruction? Yet neverthelefs, you bid me be of good courage, and tell me that all is now fafe and fecure, becaufe the magistrate does not now enjoin the observance of his own decrees in matters of religion, but only the decrees of the church. Of what church I befeech you? Of that certainly which likes him beft. As if he that compels me by laws and penalties to enter into this or the other church, did not interpose his own judgment in the matter. What (difference is there whether he lead me himfelf, or deliver me over to be lead by others? I depend both ways upon his will, and it is he that determines both ways of my eternal state. Would an Israelite, that had worfhipped Baal upon the command of his king. have been in any better condition, becaufe fomebody had told him that the king ordered nothing in religion upon his own head, nor commanded any thing to be done by his fubjects in divine worfhip, but what was approved by the counfel of priefts, and declared to be of divine right by the doctors of their church ? If the religion of any church become therefore true and faving, because the heads of that sect, the prelates and priefts, and those of that tribe, do all of them, with all their might, extol and praise it; what religion can ever be accounted erroneous, falfe and destructive? I am doubtful concerning the doctrine of the Socinians, I am fuspicious of the way of worfhip practifed by the Papifts, or Lutherans; will it be ever a jot the fafer for me to join either unto the one D 2 or

or the other of those churches, upon the magistrate's command, because he commands nothing in religion but by the authority and counsel of the doctors of the church?

But to fpeak the truth, we must acknowledge that the church (if a convention of clergymen, making canons, must be called by that name) is for the most part more apt to be influenced by the court, than the court by the church. How the church was under the viciflitude of orthodox and Arian emperors, is very well known. Or, if those things be too remote, the English history affords us fresher examples, in the reigns of Henry VIII. Edward VI. Mary, and Elizabeth, how eafily and fmoothly the clergy changed their decrees, their articles of faith, their form of worfhip, every thing, according to the inclination of those kings and queens. Yet were those kings and queens of fuch different minds, in point of religion, and enjoined thereupon fuch different things, that no man in his wits (I had almost faid none but an atheist) will prefume to fay that any fincere and upright worthipper of God could, with a fafe confcience, obey their feveral decrees. To conclude, it is the fame)thing whether a king that prefcribes laws to another man's religion, pretend to do it by his own judgment, or by the ecclefiaftical authority and advice of others. The decisions of churchmen, whole differences and difputes are fufficiently known, cannot be any founder or fafer, than his. Nor can all their fuffrages joined together add any new ftrength unto the civil power. Though this also must be taken notice of, that princes feldom have any regard to the fuffrages of ecclefiaftics that are not favourers of their own faith and way of worship.

But.

Digitized by Google

But, after all, the principal confideration, and which abfolutely determines this controverfy, is this; although the magistrate's opinion in religion be found, and the way that he appoints be truly evangelical, yet if I be not thoroughly perfuaded thereof in my own mind, there will be no fafety for me in following it. No way whatfoever that I shall walk in, against the dictates of my conficence, will ever bring Xme to the manfions of the bleffed. I may grow rich by an art that L take not delight in; I may be cured of fome difease by remedies that I have not faith in; but I cannot be faved by a religion that I diftruft, and by a worship that Labhor. It is in vain for an unbeliever to take up the outward fhew of another man's profession. Faith only, and inward fincerity, are the things that procure acceptance with God. The most likely and most approved remedy can have no effect upon the patient, if his ftomach reject it as foon as taken : and you will in vain crama medicine down a fick man's throat, which his particular conftitution will be fure to turn into poifon. In a word, whatloever may be doubtful in religion, vet this at least is certain, that no religion, which I X believe not to be true, can be either true, or profitable unto me. In vain therefore do princes compel their fubjects to come into their church-communion, under pretence of faving their fouls. If they believe, they will come of their own aecord; if they belive not, their coming will nothing avail them. How great foever, in fine, may be the pretence of good-will and charity, and concern for the falvation. of men's fouls, men cannot be forced to be faved, whether they will or no. And therefore, when all isdone, they must be left to their own confciences.

Having_

Having thus at length freed men from all dominion over one another in matters of religion, let us now confider what they are to do. All men know and acknowledge that God ought to be publicly t worshipped; why otherwise do they compel one another unto the public affemblies? Men therefore, conftituted in this liberty, are to enter into fome religious fociety, that they may meet together, not Konly for mutual edification, but to own to the world that they worship God, and offer unto his divine majefty fuch fervice as they themfelves are not ashamed of, and such as they think not unworthy of him, nor unacceptable to him: and finally, that by the purity of doctrine, holine's of life, and decent form of worship, they may draw others unto the love of the true religion, and perform fuch other things in religion as cannot be done by each private man apart.

Thefe religious focieties I call churches; and thefe, I fay, the magifirate ought to tolerate: for the bufinefs of thefe affemblies of the people is nothing but what is lawful for every man in particular to take care of; I mean, the falvation of their fouls. Nor in this cafe is there any difference between the national church and other feparated congregations. But as in every church there are two things effectively to be confidered, 'the outward form ' and rites of public worfhip, and the doctrines and ' articles of faith,' thefe things muft be handled each diffinctly, that fo the whole matter of toleration may, the more clearly be underflood.

Concerning outward worfhip, I fay, in the first place, that the magistrate has no power to enforce by law, either in his own church, or much lefs in another, ther, the use of any rites or ceremonies whatfoever in the worship of God. And this not only because these churches are free societies, but because whatfoever is practised in the worship of God, is only for far justifiable as it is believed by those that practise it to be acceptable unto him. Whatsoever is not done with that assurance of faith, is neither well done in itself nor can it be acceptable to God. To impose such things therefore upon any people, contrary to their own judgment, is in effect to command them to offend God; which, considering that the end of all religion is to please him, and that liberty is effentially necessary to that end, appears to be absurd beyond expression.

Digitized by GOOGLC

But, perhaps, it may be concluded from hence, • That I deny unto the magiftrate all manner of • power about indifferent things; which, if it be not • granted, the whole fubject matter of law-making • is taken away.' No; I readily grant that indiffe-• rent things, and perhaps none but fuch, are fubjected to the legiflative power. But it does not therefore follow, that the magiftrate may ordain whatfoever he pleafes concerning any thing that is indifferent; The public good is the rule and meafure of all lawmaking. If a thing be not ufeful to the commonwealth, though it be never fo indifferent, it may not prefently be eftablifhed by law.

But, further, things never to indifferent in their own nature, when they are brought into the church and worfhip of God, are removed out of the reach of the magistrate's jurifdiction; becaufe, in that ufe, they have no connexion at all with civil affairs. The only bufinefs of the church is the falvation of fouls; and it no ways concerns the common-wealth, or any member of it, that this or the other ceremony be there made use of. Neither the use, nor the omiffion of any ceremonies, in those religious affemblies, does either advantage or prejudice the life, liberty, or eftate of any man. For example, let it be granted, that the washing of an infant with water is in itfelf an indifferent thing: let it be granted alfo, that if the magistrate understand such washing to be profitable to the curing or preventing of any difeafe that the children are fubject unto, and efteem the matter weighty enough to be taken care of by a law, in that cafe he may order it to be done. But will any one therefore fay, that a magistrate has the fame right to ordain, by law, that all children shall be baptized by priefts, in the facred font, in order to . the purification of their fouls? The extreme difforence of these two cafes is visible to every one at first fight. Or let us apply the last case to the child of a Jew, and the thing will fpeak itfelf; for what hinders but a Christian magistrate may have subjects that are Jews? Now, if we acknowledge that fuch. an injury may not be done unto a Jew, as to compel him, against his own opinion, to practife in his religion a thing that is in its nature indifferent; how can we maintain that any thing of this kind may be done to a Chriftian?

^{35:}

Again, things in their own nature indifferent cannot, by any human authority, be made any part of the worfhip of God; for this very reafon, becaufe they are indifferent; for fince indifferent things are not capable, by any virtue of their own, to propitiate the Deity, no human power or authority can confer on them fo much dignity and excellency, as to enable them to do it. In the common affairs of life, that use of indifferent things which God has not not forbidden, is free and lawful; and therefore in those things human authority has place. But it is ¥ not fo in matters of religion. Things indifferent are not otherwife lawful in the worship of God than as they are inftituted by God himfelf; and as he, by fome politive command, has ordained them to be made a part of that worfhip which he will vouchfafe to accept of at the hands of poor finful men: nor when an incenfed Deity shall ask us, ' Who has re-' quired thefe, or fuch like, things at your hands?' will it be enough to answer him, that the magistrate commanded them. If civil jurifdiction extended thus far, what might not lawfully be introduced into \star religion? What hodge-podge of ceremonies, what fuperstitious inventions, built upon the magistrate's authority, might not (against confcience) be imposed upon the worshippers of God? For the greatest part of these ceremonies and superstitions confists in the religious use of such things as are in their own nature indifferent; nor are they finful upon any other account than becaufe God is not the author of them. The fprinkling of water, and the use of bread and wine, are both in their own nature, and in the ordinary occasions of life, altogether indifferent. Will any man therefore fay, that these things could have been introduced into religion, and made a part of divine worfhip, if not by divine infitution? If any human authority or civil power could have done this, why might it not also enjoin the eating of fifh, and drinking of ale, in the holy banquet, as a part of divine worfhip? Why not the fprinkling of the blood of beafts in churches, and explations by water or fire, and abundance more of this kind? But thefe things, how indifferent foever they be in common uses, when they come to be annexed unto divine worship, without divine authority.

A thority, they are as abominable to God as the facrifice of a dog. And why a dog fo abominable? What difference is there between a dog and a goat, in respect of the divine nature, equally and infinitely diftant from all affinity with matter, unlefs it bethat God required the use of the one in his worthip, and not of the other? We fee therefore that indifferent things, how much foever they be under the power of the civil magistrate, yet cannot upon that pre-Atence be introduced into religion, and imposed upon religious affemblies; becaufe, in the worthip of God + they wholly ceafe to be indifferent. He that wor-Ahips God, does it with a defign to pleafe him, and procure his favour ; but that cannot be done by him, who, upon the command of another, offers unto God that which he knows will be difpleafing to him, because not commanded by himself. This is. not to pleafe God, or appeafe his wrath, but willingly and knowingly to provoke him, by a manifest contempt; which is a thing abfolutely repugnant to the nature and end of worfhip.

But it will here be asked, ' If nothing belonging to divine worship be left to human discretion, how ' is it then that churches themfelves have the power • of ordering any thing about the time and place of 'worfhip, and the like?' To this I answer, that in religious worship we must distinguish between what is part of the worship itself, and what is but a circumstance. That is a part of the worship which is pleafing to him, and therefore that is neceffary. Circumstances are fuch things which, though in general they cannot be feparated from worfhip, yet the particular inftances or modifications of them are not determined, and therefore they are different. Of this '

Digitized by Google

this fort are the time and place of worfhip, the habit \mathcal{Y}^{+} and posture of him that worships. These are circumftances, and perfectly indifferent, where God x has not given any express command about them. For example, amongst the Jews, the time and place of their worthip, and the habits of those that officiated in it, were not mere circumstances, but a part of the worship itself; in which, if any thing were defective, or different from the inftitution, they could not, hope that it would be accepted by God. But thefe, to Christians under the liberty of the gospel, are mere circumstances of worship, which the prudence of every church may bring into fuch use as shall be judged most subservient to the end of order, decency, and edification. Though even under the golpel allo, those who believe the first or the feventh day to be fet apart by God, and confecrated still to his worfhip, to them that portion of time is not a fimple circumstance, but a real part of divine worship. which can neither be changed nor neglected.

In the next place, as the magiftrate has no power to impole, by his laws, the use of any rites and \times ceremonies in any church; so neither has he any power to forbid the use of such rites and ceremonies \times as are already received, approved, and practifed by any church; because, if he did so, he would deftroy the church itself; the end of whose institution is only to worship God with freedom, after its own manner.

You will fay, 'By this rule, if fome congrega-'tions fhould have a mind to facrifice infants, or' (as the primitive chriftians were fallely accufed) 'luftfully pollute themfelves in promifcuous unclean-'nefs, or practife any other fuch heinous enormities, is the magistrate obliged to tolerate them, because * they are committed in a religious affembly ?' I anfwer, No. These things are not lawful in the ordi-4 hary course of life, nor in any private house, and therefore neither are they fo in the worship of God, or in any religious meeting. But indeed if any people, congregated upon account of religion, should be defirous to facrifice a calf, I deny that that ought to be prohibited by a law. Melibæus, whole calf it is, may lawfully kill his own calf at home, and burn any part of it that he thinks fit; for no injury is thereby done to any one, no prejudice to another man's goods, and for the fame reafon he may kill his calf also in a religious meeting. Whether the \ doing fo be well-pleating to God, or no, it is their part to confider that do it. The part of the ma-gistrate is only to take care that the commonwealth receive no prejudice, and that there be no injury done to any man, either in life or eftate.) And thus what may be spent on a feast, may be spent on a facrifice. But if, peradventure, such were the state of things, that the interest of the commonwealth required all flaughter of beafts fhould be forborn for fome time, in order to the increasing of the flock of cattle, that had been destroyed by fome extraordinary murrain; who fees not that the magistrate, in such a cafe, may forbid all his fubjects to kill any calves for any use whatsoever? Only it is to be observed, in this cafe, that the law is not made about a religious, but a political matter; nor is the facrifice, but the flaughter of calves thereby prohibited.

By this we fee what difference there is between the church and the commonwealth. Whatfoever is lawful in the commonwealth, cannot be prohibited by the magiftrate in the church. Whatfoever is permitted unto any one of his fubjects for their ordinary nary use, neither can, nor ought to be forbidden by him to any fect of people for their religious uses. If any man may lawfully take bread or wine, either fitting or kneeling, in his own houfe, the law ought not to abridge him of the fame liberty in his religious worfhip; though in the church the use of bread and wine be very different, and be there applied to the mysteries of faith, and rites of divine worship. But those things that are prejudicial to the commonweal of a people in their ordinary use, and are therefore forbidden by laws, those things ought not to be permitted to churches in their facred rites. Only the magistrate ought always to be very careful, that he do not mifule his authority, to the oppression of any church, under pretence of public good.

Digitized by Google

It may be faid, 'What if a church be idolatrous, * is that also to be tolerated by the magistrate?' In anfwer, I afk, ' What power can be given to the magistrate for the suppression of an idolatrous ' church, which may not, in time and place, be " made use of to the ruin of an orthodox one?" For it must be remembered that the civil power is the fame every where, and the religion of every prince is orthodox to himfelf. If therefore fuch a power be granted unto the civil magistrate in spirituals, as that at Geneva (for example), he may extirpate, by violence and blood, the religion, which is there reputed idolatrous, by the fame rule another magistrate, in fome neighbouring country, may oppress the reformed religion, and, in India, the christian. The civil power can either change every thing in religion, according to the prince's pleafure, or it can change nothing. If it be once permitted to introduce any thing into religion, by the means of laws and penalties, there can be no bounds put to it; but it will in the

Ю

Digitized by Google

the fame manner be lawful to alter every thing, according to that rule of truth which the magistrate has framed unto himfelf. No man whatfoever ought therefore to be deprived of his terrestrial enjoyments, upon account of his religion: not even Americans, fubjected unto a Christian prince, are to be punished either in body or goods, for not embracing our faith and worship. If they are perfuaded that they please God in observing the rites of their own country, and that they shall obtain happiness by that means, they are to be left unto God and themfelves. Let us trace this matter to the bottom. Thus it is. An inconfiderable and weak number of Christians, deftitute of every thing, arrive in a Pagan country: thefe foreigners befeech the inhabitants, by the bowels of humanity, that they would fuccour them with the neceflaries of life: those neceflaries are given them; habitations are granted; and they all join together, and grow up into one body of people. The Chriftian religion, by this means, takes root in that country, and fpreads itfelf, but does not fuddenly grow the ftrongeft. While things are in this condition, peace, friendship, faith, and equal justice, are preferved amongst them. At length the magistrate becomes a Christian, and by that means their party becomes the most powerful: then immediately all compacts are to be broken, all civil rights to be violated, that idolatry may be extirpated; and unless these innocent pagans, firict observers of the rules of equity, and of the law of nature, and no ways offending against the laws of the fociety; I fay, unlefs they will forfake their ancient religion, and embrace a new and strange one, they are to be turned out of the lands and possessions of their forefathers, and perhaps deprived of life itfelf. Then at last it appears what zeal for the church, joined with the defire of dominion mion is capable to produce; and how eafily the pretence of religion, and of the care of fouls, ferves for a cloke to covetoufnefs, rapine, and ambition.

43

Now, whofoever maintains that idolatry is to be rooted out of any place by laws, punifhments, fire, and fword, may apply this ftory to himfelf. For the reafon of the thing is equal, both in America and Europe; and neither Pagans there, nor any diffenting Christians here, can, with any right, be deprived of their worldly goods, by the predominating faction) of a court-church; nor are any civil rights to be either changed or violated upon account of religion in one place more than another.

• But idolatry (fay fome) is a fin, and therefore Y " not to be tolerated." If they faid, it were therefore to be avoided, the inference were good. But it does not follow, that because it is a fin, it ought therefore *to be punished by the magistrate. For it does not belong unto the magistrate to make use of his fword in punishing every thing, indifferently, that he takes to be a fin against God. Covetousness, uncharitablenefs, idlenefs, and many other things are fins, by the confent of all men, which yet no man ever faid were to be punished by the magistrate : the reason is, becaufe they are not prejudicial to other men's rights, nor do they break the public peace of focieties. Nay, even the fins of lying and perjury are no where punishable by laws, unlefs in certain cafes, in which the real turpitude of the thing, and the offence against God, are not confidered, but only the injury done unto j men's neighbours, and to the commonwealth. And what if in another country, to a Mahometan or a Pagan prince, the Christian religion feem false and offenfive five to God, may not the Christians, for the fame reafon, and after the fame manner be extirpated there?

E 2

But it may be urged further, ' That by the law of Moles, idolaters were to be rooted out.' True indeed, by the law of Mofes, but that is not obligatory to us Christians. No body pretends that every thing, generally enjoined by the law of Mofes, ought to be practifed by Christians But there is nothing more frivolous than that common diffinction of moral, judicial, and ceremonial law, which men ordinarily make use of: for no positive law whatsoever can oblige any people, but those to whom it is given. 'Hear, O Israel!' sufficiently restrains the obligation of the law of Mofes only to that people. And this confideration alone is answer enough unto those that urge the authority of the law of Mofes, for the inflicting of capital punishments upon idolaters. But however, I will examine this argument a little more particularly.

The cafe of idolaters, in respect of the Jewish commonwealth, falls under a double confideration. The first is of those who, being initiated in the Mofaical rites, and made citizens of that commonwealth, did afterwards apoftatize from the worship of the God of Ifrael. These were proceeded against as traitors and rebels, guilty of no lefs than high treason. For the commonwealth of the Jews, different in that from all others, was an absolute theecracy; nor was there, nor could there be, any difference between that commonwealth and the church. The laws eftablished there concerning the worship of one invisible Deity, were the civil laws of that people, and a part of their political government; in which God himfelf was the legiflator. Now if any one

Digitized by Google

r.

one can fhew me where there is a commonwealth, at this time, conftituted upon that foundation, I will acknowledge that the ecclefiaftical laws do there unavoidably become a part of the civil, and that the fubjects of that government both may, and ought to be kept in ftrict conformity with that church by the eivil power. But there is abfolutely no fuch thing, under the gofpel, as a Christian commonwealth. There are indeed many cities and kingdoms that have embraced the faith of Chrift; but they have retained their ancient form of government, with which the law of Chrift hath not at all meddled. He indeed hath taught men how, by faith and good works, they may attain eternal life; but he inftituted no commonwealth. He prescribed unto his followers no new and peculiar form of government; nor put he the fword into any magistrate's hand, with commillion to make use of it in forcing men to forfake their former religion, and receive his.

Secondly, Foreigners, and fuch as were 'ftrangers to the commonwealth of Ifrael,' were not compelled by force to obferve the rites of the Mofaical law. But on the contrary, in the very fame place where it is ordered, that ' an Ifraelite that was an idolater, ' fhould be put to death.' there it is provided, that ' ftrangers should not be vexed nor oppressed,' Exod. xxii. 20, 21. I confess that the feven nations that polfeffed the land which was promifed to the Ifraelites, were utterly to be cut off: but this was not fingly because they were idolaters; for, if it had been the reason, why were the Moabites and the other nations to be fpared? No: the reafon is this; God being in a peculiar manner the king of the Jews, he could not fuffer the adoration of any other deity, (which was properly an act of high treafon E 3 againft ithe New Testament to be the word of God, he does not thereby alter any thing in men's civil rights, If a heathen doubt of both Testaments, he is not therefore to be punished as a pernicious citizen. The power of the magiftrate, and the effates of the people, may be equally fecure, whether any man believe thefe things or no. [I readily grant, that these opinions are falle and abfurd: but the business of laws is not to provide for the truth of opinions, but for the fafety and fecurity of the commonwealth, and of every particular man's goods and perfon. And fo it ought to be. For truth certainly would do well enough, if the were once left to thift for herfelf. She feldom has received. and I fear never will receive, much affistance from the power of great men, to whom the is but rarely known, and more rarely welcome. She is not taught by laws, nor has the any need of force to procure her. entrance into the minds of men. Errors indeed prevail by the affiftance of foreign and borrowed fuccours: but if truth makes not her way into the understanding by her own light, she will be but the weaker for any borrowed force violence can add to her.) Thus much for speculative opinions. Let us now proceed to practical ones.

:

A good life, in which confifts not the leaft part of religion and true piety, concerns alfo the civil government; and in it lies the fafety both of men's fouls, and of the commonwealth. Moral actions belong therefore to the juridiction both of the outward and inward court, both of the civil and domestic governor, L mean, both of the magistrate and conficence Here therefore is great danger, left one of these jurifdictions intrench upon the other, and difcord arife between the keeper of the public peace, and the overfeers of fouls. But if what has been already faid concerning the limits of

Digitized by Google

48

X

of both these governments be rightly confidered, it will easily remove all difficulty in this matter.

Every man has an immortal foul, capable of eter- ψ nal happiness or misery; whose happiness depending upon his believing and doing those things in this life, which are neceffary to the obtaining of God's favour, and are prefcribed by God to that end: it follows from thence, first, that the observance of these things is the highest obligation that lies upon mankind, and that our utmost care, application, and diligence, ought to be exercifed in the fearch and performance of them; becaufe there is nothing in this world that is of any confideration in comparison with eternity. Secondly, that feeing one man does not violate the right of another, by his erroneous opinions, and undue manner of worfhip, nor is his perdition, any prejudice to another man's affairs; therefore the care of each man's falva- γ tion belongs only to himfelf. But I would not have this understood, as if I meant hereby to condemn all charitable admonitions, and affectionate endeavours to reduce men from errors, which are indeed the greatest duty of a Chriftian. Any one may employ as many exhortations and arguments as he pleafes, towards the promoting of another man's falvation; but all force and compulsion are to be forborn. Nothing is to be done imperioufly. No body is obliged in that matter to yield obedience unto the admonitions or injunctions of another, further than he himfelf is perfuaded. Every man, in that, has the fupreme and abfolute authority of judging for himfelf. And the reafon is, becaufe no body elfe is concerned in it, nor can receive any prejudice from his conduct therein.

But befides their fouls, which are immortal, men have also their temporal lives here upon earth: the ftate flate whereof being frail and fleeting, and the duration uncertain, they have need of feveral outward conveniences to the fupport thereof; which are to be procured or preferved by pains and industry. For those things , that are neceffary to the comfortable support of our lives, are not the fpontaneous products of nature, nor do offer themselves fit and prepared for our use. This part therefore draws on another care, and neceffarily gives another employment. But the pravity of mankind being fuch, that they had rather injurioufly prey upon the fruits of other men's labours, than take pains to provide for themfelves; the neceffity of preferving men in the poffeffion of what honeft industry has already acquired, and also of preferving their liberty and ftrength, whereby they may acquire what they further want, obliges men to enter into fociety with one another; that by mutual affiftance, and joint force, they may fecure unto each other their properties in the things that contribute to the comfort and happines of this life, leaving in the mean while to every man the care of his own eternal happines; the attainment whereof can neither be facilitated by another man's industry, nor can the loss of it turn to another man's prejudice, nor the hope of it be forced from him by any external violence: but forafmuch as men thus entering into focieties, grounded upon their mutual compacts of affiftance, for the defence of their temporal goods, may neverthelefs be deprived of them, either by the rapine and fraud of their fellow-citizens, or by the hoftile violence of foreigners; the remedy of this λ evil confifts in arms, riches, and multitude of citizens; the remedy of the other in laws; and the care of all things, relating both to the one and the other, is committed by the fociety to the civil magistrate. This is the original, this is the use, and these are the bounds of the legiflative (which is the fupreme) power in

49

50

51 .

in every commonwealth: I mean, that provision may \checkmark be made for the fecurity of each man's private possiblefions; for the peace, riches, and public commodities of the whole people, and, as much as possible, for the increase of their inward strength against foreign invasions.

Thefe things being thus explained, it is eafy to underitand to what end the legiflative power ought to be directed, and by what measures regulated, and that is the temporal good and outward profperity of the foclety, which is the fole reason of men's entering into fociety, and the only thing they feek and aim at in it. And it is also evident what liberty remains to men in reference to their eternal falvation, and that is, that every one should do what he in his conficience is perfuaded to be acceptable to the Almighty, on whose good pleasure and acceptance depends his eternal happines. For obedience is due in the first place to God, and afterwards to the laws.

But fome may afk, 'What if the magistrate should enjoin any thing by his authority that appears un-"lawful to the confcience of a private perfon?" I anfwer, That if government be faithfully administered, and the counfels of the magistrate be indeed directed to the public good, this will feldom happen. But if perhaps it do fo fall out; I fay, that fuch a private perfon is to abitain from the action that he judges uni, i lawful, and he is to undergo the punifhment, which it is not unlawful for him to bear. For the private judgment of any perfon concerning a law enacted in political matters for the public good, does not take away the obligation of that law, nor deferve a difpensation : but if the law indeed be concerning things that lie not within the verge of the magistrate's authority, (as for example, that the people, or any party amongst them, fhould fhould be compelled to embrace a strange religion, and join in the worfhip and ceremonies of another church) men are not in these cases obliged by that law against their confciences: for the political fociety is inftituted for no other end but only to fecure every man's polfeffion of the things of this life. The care of each man's foul, and of the things of heaven, which neither does belong to the commonwealth, nor can be fubjected to it, is left entirely to every man's felf. Thus the fafeguard of men's lives, and of the things that belong unto this life, is the bulinefs of the commonwealth; and the preferving of those things unto their owners is the duty of the magistrate : and therefore the magistrate cannot take away these worldly things from this man or party, and give them to that; nor change property amongst fellow-fubjects (no not even by a law) for a caufe that has no relation to the (end of civil government; I mean, for their religion; which, whether it be true or false, does no prejudice to the worldly concerns of their fellow-fubjects, which are the things that only belong unto the care of the commonwealth.

52

⁶ But what if the magistrate believe such a law as ⁶ this to be for the public good?⁷ I answer, As the private judgment of any particular person, if erroneous, does not exempt him from the obligation of law; To the private judgment (as I may call it) of the magistrate, does not give him any new right of imposing laws upon his subjects, which neither was in the conflictution of the government granted him, nor ever was in the power of the people to grant; and least of all, if he make it his business to enrich and advance his followers and fellow-sectaries with the solid others. ⁶ But what if the magistrate believe that he has a ⁶ right to make such laws, and that they are for the public

53

'public good, and his fubjects believe the contrary? 'Who fhall be judge between them?' Lanfwer, God alone. For there is no judge upon earth between the fupreme magiftrate and the people. God, I fay, is the only judge in this cafe, who will retribute unto every one at the laft day, according to his deferts; that is, according to his fincerity and uprightnefs, in endeavouring to promote piety, and the public weal and peace of mankind. 'But what fhall be ' done in the mean while?' I anfwer, The principal and chief care of every one ought to be of his own foul first, and in the next place of the public peace; though yet there are very few will think it is peace there, where they fee all laid waste.

There are two forts of contells amonght men, the one managed by law, the other by force; and thefe are of that nature, that where the one ends, the other always begins. But it is not my bulinels to inquire into the power of the magistrate in the different conflitutions of nations. I only know what ufually happens where controverfies arife, without a judge to determine them. You will fay then, 'The magistrate ' being the ftronger, will have his will, and carry his ' point.' Without doubt. But the queftion is not here concerning the doubtfulnels of the event, but the rule of right.

But to come to particulars. (I fay, firft, No opinions contrary to human fociety, or to those moral rules which are neceffary to the prefervation of civil fociety, are to be tolerated by the magistrate.) But of these indeed examples in any church are rare. For no fect can easily arrive to fuch a degree of madnels, as that it should think fit to teach, for doctrines of religion, fuch things as manifestly undermine the foundations of F fociety, fociety, and are therefore condemned by the judgment of all mankind : becaufe their own intereft, peace, reputation, every thing, would be thereby endangered.

54

Another more fecret evil, but more dangerous to the commonwealth, is, when men arrogate to themfelves, and to those of their own fect, some peculiar prerogative, covered over with a specious shew of deceitful words, but in effect opposite to the civil right of the community. For example: we cannot find any fect that teaches expressly and openly, that men are not obliged to keep their promise; that princes may be dethroned by those that differ from them in religion; or that the dominion of all things belongs only to themfelves: for these things, proposed thus nakedly and plainly, would foon draw on them the eye and hand of the magistrate, and awaken all the care of the commonwealth to a watchfulnefs against the spreading of fo dangerous an evil. But neverthelefs, we find those that fay the fame things, in other words What elfe do they mean, who teach ' that faith is not to be kept • with heretics ?' Their meaning, forfooth, is that the privilege of breaking faith belongs unto themfelves: for they declare all that are not of their communion to be heretics, or at least may declare them fo whenfoever they think fit. What can be the meaning of their afferting, that 'kings excommunicated forfeit their • crowns and kingdoms?' It is evident that they thereby arrogate unto themfelves the power of depofing kings: because they challenge the power of excommunication, as the peculiar right of their hierarchy. That ' dominion is founded in grace,' is also an affertion by which those that maintain it do plainly lay claim to the poffeffion of all things: for they are not fo wanting to themfelves as not to believe, or at least as not to profefs, themfelves to be truly pious and faithful.

faithful. These therefore, and the like, who attribute unto the faithful, religious, and orthodox; that is, in plain terms, unto themfelves; any peculiar privilege or power above other mortals, in civil concernments; or who, upon pretence of religion, do challenge any manner of authority over fuch as are not affociated with them in their ecclefiaftical communion: I fay, thefe have no right to be tolerated by the magistrate; as neither those that will not own and teach the duty of tolerating all men in matters of mere religion. For what do all these and the like doctrines fignify, but (that those men may, and are ready upon any occasion to feize the government, and poffels themfelves of the eftates and fortunes of their fellow-fubjects; and that they only ask leave to be tolerated by the magistrate to long, until they find themselves ftrong enough to effect it.

Again, that church can have no right to be tolerated by the magistrate, which is constituted upon such a bottom, that all those who enter into it, do thereby, ipfo facto, deliver themselves up to the protection and fervice of another prince. For by this means the magiftrate would give way to the fettling a foreign jurif-(diction in his own country, and fuffer his own people to be lifted, as it it were, for foldiers against his owngovernment. Nor does the frivolous and fallacious diffinction between the court and the church afford any remedy to this inconvenience; efpecially when both the one and the other are equally fubject to the absolute authority of the fame perfon, who has not only power to perfuade the members of his church to whatfoever he lifts, (either as purely religious or as in order thereunto) but can also enjoin it them on pain of eternal fire. It is ridiculous for any one to profess himself to be a Mahometan only in his reli-F 2 k gion, but in every thing elfe a faithful fubject to a Chriftan magistrate, whilst at the fame time he acknowledges himfelf bound to yield blind obedience to the Musti of Constantinople; who himfelf is entirely obedient to the Ottoman Emperor, and frames the feigned oracles of that religion according to his pleafure. But this Mahometan living amongst Christians, would yet more apparently renounce their government, if he acknowledge the fame perfon to be head of his church who is the fupreme magistrate in the state.

gion,

Laftly, Thofe are not at all to be tolerated who deny the being of a God.' Promifes, covenants, and oaths, which are the bonds of human fociety, can have no hold upon an atheift. The taking away of God, though but even in thought, diffolves all. Befides alfo, those that by their atheim undermine and deftroy all religion, can have no pretence of religion whereupon to challenge the privilege of a toleration, As for other practical opinions, though not abfolutely free from all error, yet if they do not tend to eftablish dominion over others, or civil impunity to the church in which they are taught, there can be no reason why they should not be tolerated.

It remains that I fay fomething concerning those affemblies, which being vulgarly called, and perhaps having fometimes been, conventicles, and nurferies of factions and feditions, are thought to afford the fitrongeft matter of objection against this doctrine of toleration: but this has not happened by any thing peculiar unto the genius of fuch affemblies, but by the unhappy circumstances of an oppressed or ill-fettled liberty. Those accusations would foon cease, if the law of toleration were once to fettled, that all churches were obliged to lay down toleration as the foundation of.

Digitized by Google

of their own liberty, and teach, that liberty of confcience is every man's natural right, equally belonging to diffenters as to themfelves; and that no body ought to be compelled in matters of religion, either X by law or force. The establishment of this one thing would take away all ground of complaints and tumults upon account of confcience. And these causes of difcontents and animofities being once removed, there would remain nothing in these affemblies that were not more peaceable, and lefs apt to produce difturbances of state, than in any other meetings whatfoever. But let us examine particularly the heads of thefe accufations.

You will fay, ' That affemblies and meetings en-• danger the public peace, and threaten the common-" wealth.' I answer, if this be fo, why are there daily fuch numerous meetings in markets and courts of judicature? Why are crowds upon the exchange, and a concourfe of people in cities fuffered? You, will reply, these are civil affemblies; but those that * we object against are ecclesiastical. I answer, it is a likely thing indeed, that fuch affemblies as are altogether remote from civil affairs, fhould be most apt, to embroil them. 'O! but civil affemblies are com-* posed of men that differ from one another in mat-• ters of religion, but these ecclesiastical meetings are ' of perfons that are all of one opinion.' As if and agreement in matters of religion, were in effect a y confpiracy against the commonwealth; or as if men. would not be fo much the more warmly unanimous. in religion, the lefs liberty they had of affembling. But it will be urged ftill, ' That civil affemblies are ' open and free for any one to enter into, whereas re-· ligious conventicles are more private, and thereby 'give opportunity to clandeffine machinations.' I anlwer, answer, that this is not frictly true, for many civil affemblies are not open to every one. And if fome religious meetings be private, who are they (I befeech you) that are to be blamed for it? those that defire, or those that forbid their being public? Again, you will fay, 'That religious communion does exceedingly 'unite men's minds and affections to one another, 'and is therefore the more dangerous.' But if this be fo, why is not the magistrate afraid of his own church? and why doth he not forbid their affemblies. as things dangerous to his government? You will fay, 'Because he himself is a part, and even the 'head of them.' As if he were not also a part of the commonwealth, and the head of the whole people.

Let us therefore deal plainly. The magistrate is afraid of other churches, but not of his own; becaufe he is kind and favourable to the one, but fevere. and cruel to the other. These he treats like children, and indulges them even to wantonnefs: those he uses. as flaves: and how blamelefsly foever they demean. themfelves, recompenses them no otherwise than by gallies, prifons, confifcations, and death. These he. cherifhes and defends: those he continually fcourges. and opprefies. Let him turn the tables, or let those - diffenters enjoy but the fame privileges in civils as his other fubjects, and he will quickly find that (thefe religious meetings will be no longer dangerous :. for if men enter into feditious confpiracies, it is not religion that infpires them to it in their meetings, but their fufferings and oppreffions that make them willing to eafe themfelves. Just and moderate governments are every where quiet, every where fafe: but Y oppression raises ferments, and makes men struggle to caft off an uneafy and tyrannical yoke. I know that feditions are very frequently raifed upon pretence - of

of religion : but it is as true, that, for religion, fub- γ jects are frequently ill treated, and live miferably. Believe me, the ftirs that are made, proceed not from any peculiar temper of this or that church or religious fociety, but from the common disposition of all mankind, who, when they groan under any heavy burden, endeavour naturally to shake off the voke that galls their necks. Suppose this bufiness of religion were let alone, and that there were fome other diftinction made between men and men, upon account of their different complexions, fhapes, and features; fo that those who have black hair (for example) or grey eyes, fhould not enjoy the fame privileges as other citizens, that they fhould not be permitted either to buy or fell, or live by their callings; that parents should not have the government and education of their own children; that they fhould either be excluded from the benefit of the laws, or meet with partial judges : can it be doubted but these perfons, thus? diftinguished from others by the colour of their hair and eyes, and united together by one common perfecution, would be as dangerous to the magistrate, as any others that had affociated themfelves merely upon the account of religion? Some enter into company for trade and profit; others, for want of bufinefs, have their clubs for claret : neighbourhood joins fome, and religion others. But there is one only thing? which gathers people into feditious commotions, and that is opprefion.

You will fay, 'What! will you have people 'meet at divine fervice against the magistrate's will?' I answer, Why, I pray, against his will? Is it not both lawful and necessary that they should meet? Against his will, do you fay? That is what I complain of. That is the very root of all the mischief. Why

+ Why are affemblies lefs fufferable in a church than in a theatre or market? Those that meet there are not either more vicious, or more turbulent, than those that The business in that is, that they meet elfewhere. are ill used, and therefore they are not to be fuffered. Take away the partiality that is used towards them in matters of common right; change the laws; take away the penalties unto which they are fubjected, and all things will immediately become fafe and peaceable. Nay, those that are averie to the religion of the magistrate will confider themselves fo much the more bound to maintain the peace of the commonwealth, as their condition is better in that place than elfewhere; and all the feveral feparate congregations, like fo many guardians of the public peace, will watch one another, that nothing may be innovated or changed in the form of the government; becaufe they can hope for nothing better than what they already enjoy, that is, an equal condition with their fellowfubjects, under a just and moderate government. Now, if that church, which agrees in religion with the prince, be effeemed the chief fupport of any civil government, and that for no other reafon (as has already been shewn) than because the prince is kind, and the laws are favourable to it; how much greater will be the fecurity of a government, where all good fubjects, of whatfoever church they be, without any diffinction upon account of religion, enjoying the fame favour of the prince, and the fame benefit of the laws, shall become the common support and guard of it, and where none will have any occasion to fear the feverity of the laws, but those that do injuries to their neighbours, and offend against the civil peace?

That we may draw towards a conclution, the fum of all we drive at is, ' That every man may enjoy the

60

the fame rights that are granted to others.' Is it permitted to worfhip God in the Roman manner? Let it be permitted to do it in the Geneva form alfo. Is it permitted to fpeak Latin in the market-place Let those that have a mind to it, be permitted to do it also in the church. Is it lawful for any man, in 'his own house, to kneel, stand, fit, or use any other posture, and to clothe himself in white or black, in fhort or long garments? Let it not be made unlawful to eat bread, drink wine, or wash with water in the church. In a word, whatfoever things are left free by law in the common occasions of life, let them remain free unto every church in divine worfhip. Let no man's life, or body, or house, or estate, fuffer any manner of prejudice upon these accounts. Can you allow of the prefbyterian difcipline? Why should not the Epifcopal also have what they like? Ecclefiaftical authority, whether it be administered by the hands of a fingle perfon, or many, is every where the fame; and neither has any jurifdiction in things > civil, nor any manner of power of compulsion, nor any thing at all to do with riches and revenues.

Ecclefiaftical affemblies and fermons are juftified by daily experience, and public allowance: thefe are allowed to people of fome one perfuaiton; why not to all? If any thing pafs in a religious meeting feditioufly, and contrary to the public peace, it is to be punifhed in the fame manner, and no otherwife, than as if it had happened in a fair or market. Thefe meetings ought not to be fanctuaries for factious and flagitious fellows; nor ought it to be lefs lawful for men to meet in churches than in halls; nor are one part of the fubjects to be effected more blameable for their meetings than others. Every one is to be accountable for his own actions; and no man is to be laid laid under a fuspicion, or odium, for the fault of ano-Those that are feditious, murderers, thieves, ther. robbers, adulterers, flanderers, &c. of whatfoever church, whether national or not, ought to be punished and fuppreffed : but those whose doctrine is peaceable, and whole manners are pure and blamelels, ought tobe upon equal terms with their fellow-fubjects. Thus if folemn affemblies, observations of festivals, public worfhip, be permitted to any one fort of profeffors, all these things ought to be permitted to the Presbyterians, independents, anabaptifts, armenians, quakers, and others, with the fame liberty. Nay, if we may openly speak the truth, and as becomes one man to. another, neither Pagan, nor Mahometan, nor Jew, ought to be excluded from the civil rights of the commonwealth, becaufe of his religion. The gospel commands no fuch thing. The church, which ' judges ' not those that are without,' (I Cor. v. 12, 13.) wants. it not. And the commonwealth, which embraces indifferently all men that are honeft, peaceable, and industrious, requires it not. Shall we fuffer a Pagan to deal and trade with us, and shall we not fuffer him to pray unto and worfhip God? If we allow the Jews to have private houses and dwellings amonst us, why fhould we not allow them to have fynagogues? Is their doctrine more falle, their worthip more abominable, or is the civil peace more endangered, by their meeting in public, than in their private houses? But if thefe things may be granted to Jews and Pagans, furely the condition of any Christians ought not to be worfe than theirs in a Christian commonwealth.

6ł-

You will fay, perhaps, 'Yes, it ought to be, be-'caufe, they are more inclinable to factions, tumults, 'and civil wars.' I anfwer, Is this the fault of the Chriftian religion? If it be fo, truly the Chriftian religion religion is the worft of all religions, and ought neither to be embraced by any particular perfon, nor tolerated by any commonwealth. For if this be the genius, this the nature of the Christian religion, to be turbulent, and destructive to the civil peace, that church itfelf which the magistrate indulges will not always be innocent But far be it from us to fay any fuch thing of that religion, which carries the greatest +opposition to covetousness, ambition, difcord, contention, and all manner of inordinate defires, and is the most modest and peaceable religion that ever was. We must therefore feek another cause of those evils that are charged upon religion: and if we confider right, we shall find it to confist wholly in the subject that I am treating of. It is not the diversity of opinions, (which cannot be avoided) but the refufal of toleration to those that are of different opinions, (which might have been granted) that has produced all the buffles and wars that have been in the Chriftian world upon account of religion. The heads and leaders of the church, moved by avarice and infatiable defire of dominion, making use of the immoderate ambition of magistrates, and the credulous fuperstition of the giddy multitude, have incenfed and animated them against those that diffent from themfelves, by preaching unto them contrary to the laws 4 of the golpel, and to the precepts of charity, that fchifmatics and heretics are to be rooted out of their 4poffeffions, and deftroyed. And thus have they mixed together, and confounded two things that are in themselves most different, the church and the commonwealth. Now, as it is very difficult for men patiently to fuffer themfelves to be ftript of the goods which they have got by their honeft industry, and y contrary to all the laws of equity, both human and divine, to be delivered up for a prey to other men's violence violence and rapine, especially when they are otherwife altogether blamelefs, and that the occasion for which they are thus treated, does not at all belong to the jurildiction of the magistrate, but entirely to the conficience of every particular man, for the conduct of which he is accountable to God only: what elfe can be expected, but that these men growing weary of the evils under which they labour, should in the end think it lawful for them to refift force with force, and to defend their natural rights (which are, not forfeitable upon account of religion) with arms, as well as they can? That this has been hitherto the ordinary courfe of things, is abundantly evident in hiftory: and that it will continue to be to hereafter, is but too apparent in reason. It cannot indeed be otherwife, to long as the principle of perfecution for religion shall prevail, as it has done hitherto, with magistrate and people, and fo long as those, that ought to be the preachers of peace and concord, fhall continue with all their art and ftrength, to excite men to arms, and found the trumpet of war. But that magistrates should thus fuffer these incendiaries, and disturbers of the public peace, might justly be wondered at, if it did not appear that they have been invited by them unto a participation of the fpoil; and have therefore thought fit to make use of their covetoufnefs and pride, as means whereby to increase their own power. For who does not fee, that these good men are indeed more ministers of the government, than minifters of the golpel; and that by flattering the ambition, and favouring the dominion of princes and men in authority, they endeavour with all their might to promote that tyranny in the commonwealth, which otherwife they fhould not be able to effablish in the church? This is the unhappy agreement that we fee between the church and state. Whereas if each

Digitized by Google

63

64

Digitized by Google.

each of them would contain its f within its f within f with bounds, the one attending to the worldly welfare of the commonwealth, the other to the falvation of fouls, it is impoffible that any difcord should ever Nave happened between them. Sed, pudet hæc opprobria, &c. God almighty grant, I befeech him, that the gospel of peace may at length be preached; and that civil magistrates growing more careful to X conform their own confciences to the law of God, and lefs folicitous about the binding of other men's confciences by human laws, may, like fathers of their country, direct all their counfels and endeavours to promote univerfally the civil welfare of all their children, except only of fuch as are arrogant, ungovernable, and injurious to their brethren; and that all ecclefiaftical men, who boaft themfelves to be the fucceffors of the apoftles, walking peaceably and modeftly in the apofiles' fteps, without intermeddling with state affairs, may apply themselves wholly to promote the falvation of fouls.

G

Farewell

65.

POSTSCRIPT.

POSTSCRIPT.

HERHAPS it may not be amifs to add a few things concerning herefy and fchifm. A Turk is not, nor can be, either heretic or fchifmatic to a Chriftian : and if any man fall off from the Chriftian faith to Mahometanifm, he does not thereby become a heretic or fchifmatic, but an apoltate and an infidel. This no body doubts of. And by this it appears, that men of different religions cannot be heretics or fchifmatics to one another.

We are to enquire therefore, what men are of the fame religion? Concerning which, it is manifeft, that those who have one and the fame rule of faith and worship, are of the fame religion; and those who have not the fame rule of faith and worship, are of different religions: for fince all things that belong unto that religion are contained in that rule, it follows neceffarily, that those who agree in one rule, are of one and the fame religion, and vice versa. Thus Turks and Christians are of different religions, because these take the holy scriptures to be the rule of their religion, and those the Koran : and for the fame reason there may be different religions also even amongst Christians. The Papists and the Lutherans, though though both of them profels faith in Chrift, and are therefore called Chriftians, yet are not both of the fame religion; becaufe thefe acknowledge nothing but the holy fcriptures to be the rule and foundation of their religion; thofe take in alfo traditions and decrees of Popes, and of all thefe together make the rule of their religion. And thus the Chriftians of St. John (as they are called) and the Chriftians of Geneva, are of different religions; becaufe thefe alfo take only the fcriptures, and thofe I know not what traditions for the rule of their religion.

Joogle

This being fettled, it follows, Firft, that herefy is a feparation made in ecclefiaftical communion between men of the fame religion, for fome opinions no way contained in the rule itfelf. And, fecondly, that amongst these who acknowledge nothing but the holy fcriptures to be their rule of faith, herefy is a feparation made in their Christian communion, for opinions not contained in the express words of fcripture. Now, this feparation may be made in a twofold manner.

1. When the greater part, or (by the magiftrate's) patronage) the flronger part of the church feparates (itfelf from others, by excluding them out of her communion, becaufe they will not profess their belief of certain opinions which are not to be found in the express words of fcripture. For it is not the paucity of those that are feparated, nor the authority of the magistrate, that can make any man guilty of herefy: but he only is an heretic who divides the church into parts, introduces names and marks of diffinction, and voluntarily makes a feparation because of fuch opinions.

G 2

2. When

Digitized by Google

67

2. When any one feparates himfelf from the Scommunion of a church, becaufe that church does not publicly profefs fome certain opinions which the holy fcriptures do not expressly teach.

Both these are heretics, & because they err in fun-' damentals, and they err obftinately against know-'ledge:' for when they have determined the holy fcriptures to be the only foundation of faith, they neverthelefs lay down certain propositions as fundamental, which are not in the feripture; and because others will not acknowledge these additional opinions of theirs, nor build upon them as if they were neceffary and fundamental, they therefore make a feparation in the church, either by withdrawing themfelves from the others, or expelling the others from them. Nor does it fignify any thing for them to fay, that their confessions and fymbols are agreeable to fcripture, and to the analogy of faith; for if they be conceived in the express words of fcripture, there can be no queftion about them, because those are acknowledged by all Chriftians to be of divine infpiration, and therefore fundamental. But if they fay, ' That • the articles which they require to be profeffed are ' confequences deduced from the fcripture:' It is undoubtedly well done of them to believe and profefs fuch things as feem unto them fo agreeable to the rule of faith; but it would be very ill done to obtrude those things upon others, unto whom they do not feem to be the indubitable doctrines of the fcripture; and to make a feparation for fuch things as thefe, which neither are nor can be fundamental, is to become heretics. For I do not think there is any man arrived to that degree of madnefs, as that he dare give out his confequences and interpretations of fcripture as divine infpirations, and compare the articles articles of faith that he has framed according to his own fancy with the authority of the scripture. I know there are fome propositions fo evidently agreeable to fcripture, that no body can deny them to be drawn from thence; but about those, therefore, there can be no difference. This only I fay, that however.) clearly we may think this or the other doctrine to be ¥ deduced from fcripture, we ought not therefore to impose it upon others as a necessary article of faith. becaufe we believe it to be agreeable to the rule of faith; unlefs we would be content also that other doctrines fhould be imposed upon us in the fame manner, and that we fhould be compelled to receive and profess all the different and contradictory opinions of Lutherans, Calvinists, Remonstrants, Anabaptifts, and other fects, which the contrivers of fymbols, fyftems, and confessions are accultomed to deliver unto their followers, as genuine and neceffary deductions from the holy feripture. I cannot but wonder at the extravagant arrogance of those men, who think that they themfelves can explain things. neceffary to falvation more clearly than the Holy Ghoft, the eternal and infinite wildom of God.

68

Digitized by Google

1

Thus much concerning herefy; which word, in common use, is applied only to the doctrinal part of religion. Let us now confider schifm, which is a crime near akin to it: for both these words seem unto me to fignify an ill-grounded separation in ecclessiaftical communion, made about things not necessary.' But fince use, which is the supreme law in matter of language, has determined that herefy relates to errors in faith, and schifm to those in worship or discipline, we must consider them under that distinction.

Schifm

70

Schifm then; for the fame reafons that have already been alledged, is nothing elfe but a feparation made in the communion of the church, upon account of fomething in divine worfhip, or ecclefiaftical difcipline, that is not any neceffary part of it. Now, nothing in worfhip or difcipline can be neceffary to Chriftian communion, but what Chrift our legiflator, or the apoftles, by infpiration of the Holy Spirit, have commanded in express words.

In a word, he that denies not any thing that the holy fcriptures teach in express words, nor makes a separation upon occasion of any thing that is not manifeftly contained in the facred text; however he may be nick-named by any sect of Christians, and declared by fome or all of them to be utterly void of true Christianity; yet indeed and in truth this man cannot be either a heretic or schifmatic.

These things might have been explained more largely and more advantageoufly; but it is enough to have hinted at them thus briefly, to a perfon of your parts.

FINIS.

